A Step Toward Unity Is A Step Toward Oneness

Anubis

I am very pleased that this Open Forum venue exists, for you see, there is a great deal to be said about the diversity that exists within unity and in the panel discussions you hear our various viewpoints. But you see, there is also a great deal that we would each wish to say, a great deal that each of us would wish to convey individually to the humanity of planet Earth. I shall waste no more space explaining that I am grateful for the space that I waste. 😊

One of the concepts closest to my heart is that of unity and what unity means to various people. I will explain what unity means to me and to those who have, I would say, reached a point that they are guiding others on the journey of return to Source.

Unity might be considered by some to function like a rowing team. I hope those who live in on a river of water, boat, let us say oars and these row together or their oars are going to become very, very damaged and there will be a lot of noise as the oars hit one another.

So when these people who have control of the oars all synchronize their movements, the boat goes beauty in motion as they the unity I speak of. These but they are not necessarily note the difference: from unity.

forward rapidly and there is work together. But this is not eight are working in unison, working from unity. Please

Now, one can say the same about any team, any group of people working together, no matter how insignificant, no matter how vital the cause. They can be working in unison without working from unity. I shall speak of the unity that I envision for this planet, the unity that I envision for the humanity of planet Earth.

Unity cannot be achieved unless there is the beginning, the first steps of a true, internalized, integrated Oneness. Now, the Oneness exists energetically. This has been established. Energetically, there is no question about the Oneness, but it does not exist in the hearts and minds of enough people within humanity that it makes a significant presence felt on our side of the veil.

So unity is a step toward Oneness. And what is unity? I don't know if I can find an example, but I can describe something that I think you will understand.

Imagine, please, that you have in front of you a round plate and on that round plate there is a round, very thin, very large round piece of color. If you would, imagine a large, round, thin piece of bread, a pancake if you understand pancakes, a tortilla if you understand tortillas, a piece of flatbread if you understand flatbread. This form is round and it is large and it is of a given color. Let us say that this color is a very gentle yet vibrant shade of lavender. And that lavender is unity.

Now, you wave your hand across this lavender and the blue comes forward. It is definitely very, very blue. Then you wave your hand again, and it is lavender. And you take your other hand and you wave it and up comes red. What happened to the lavender? It is gone.

You then place both hands over this round blob of color and you take your hands away and it is white. And you turn around because you want to take a photograph of this ever-changing color, but when you come back, it is lavender again.

The lavender represents unity. When you look at lavender, you do not see blue or red or white. You see lavender. Yet each individual hue within this color can come forward by itself as necessary. We could go into the various shades of purple that can be created with these three colors depending upon how prominent each one is. But the point I am trying to make is that unity is its own color. In this case, unity is lavender. It is not red, it is not blue, it is not white. It is lavender. It has its own color, its own identity, its own use. That is unity. And the diversity within unity is that any one of the individual colors within that unity is able to come forward and be more prominent if necessary. That, you see, is unity.

This is what is ahead for humanity and it will begin small, but humanity is One energetically, and recognizing various unities within humanity is the first step toward recognizing the full Oneness of humanity. And that unity begins when there is such a melding at the heart level that a new unit is formed from the components. This can happen with a nuclear family. This can happen with a group of friends.

When this unity can be accomplished on the inner planes, let us say at the mental level, then you begin to have what is commonly called group consciousness. There is a new mental unit that is formed. It is simply new. It did not exist before these individuals became so closely integrated that they created a unit. And within that unit, any one of them can come forward and be prominent as necessary. But when that necessity has ended, they return and become simply dissolved within the unit that they are.

A new adventure awaits humanity and those who trust enough to begin the steps to becoming a unit. This involves training, it involves commitment, it most definitely involves trust and transparency. This is the opportunity that will open. And once you have a taste of group consciousness, which is a step toward unity, which is a step toward Oneness, you will simply not wish to turn back to being an isolated individual. You will have your taste of the Oneness of humanity and you will find out, with joy, what power there is for the benefit of the whole when the unit acts together in service to the plan for the planet.

I thank you.
