The Assignment I Have Waited For

Philohstan

(from the constellation Aquila – The Eagle)

Greetings to the readership! And thank you for allowing me to speak today on a topic of my choice. I would like to present my new assignment on planet Earth to you, our respected readers, as I think it might be of interest.

As I have stated earlier, I am a philosopher and science is my hobby. As I have told you many times, I am very interested in civilizations and their development or, to be more precise, the evolutionary path that civilizations have taken. I have traveled widely, gathering this kind of information from many human families in the cosmos.

When I use the word “civilization,” I refer to civilization as a whole residing on one stellar body, meaning one planet, star or sun. As such, I am interested in the civilization inhabiting this planet called Earth. I am particularly interested in the transformational process that is unfolding now – especially after having studied epochs of your past and civilizations that preceded the current one on your planet.

My assignment was expanded recently inasmuch as I am now officially assigned to get first-hand experience of the transformational change and shift that has started, to observe and document what is happening, and even to conduct interviews and have discussions with those from my dimension who are involved in the energetic side of the shift. That is very exciting indeed.

So in my assignment I will combine my roles as philosopher, scientific analyst and historian who looks at the past of a civilization, trying to figure out the decisions that were made by humanity and the reasons behind those choices that were instrumental in their reaching the status quo in their evolution. But in addition, my assignment now is also that of reporter during this most revealing time in Earth’s history. I feel so very honored to do that.

I am observing how the shift is unfolding. I am observing how parameter by parameter the old standard is coming down. I am observing how mankind is split between those who are embracing the change that is coming through the shift in consciousness now under way and those members of Earth's current civilization who are either dormant and do not know what is going on or those who are vehemently trying to secure their comfort level by saving the old standards and defaults, clinging to the old, thinking it is so much better and safer than the unknown future. I am observing the sometimes irrational thinking that is driven by the human ego and the overriding priority, for some, of sticking to the comfort of old values, traditions and customs in order to block off the shift and the understanding of the new era that has awakened in so many souls.

I am observing and I am amazed at the entrenchment of human emotions, thoughts and behavioral patterns.

I am amazed at how difficult it seems to be for incarnated souls to have a clear view and understanding of their environment, of their lives, of the potential that is right in front of their eyes.

I am amazed to see how easy it obviously is to divert and manipulate humanity to get off the path of love and walk around blindfolded instead for centuries, for thousands of years.

I am amazed to see that the main reason for humanity to wake up and face facts is through grief, disaster, pain, loss, shock and challenges.

I am amazed as well to find out that there are now more and more people who are consciously aware of this harsh awakening, embracing their own personal challenges as a compass or a means to good, as a catalyst to move forward.

Humanity on this planet is very unique in the way it behaves and evolves. The last centuries showed me how human consciousness awakened and expanded humanity's ability to perceive more of the internal and external worlds. The speed of this awakening has increased more and more in the last 50 years. It has now reached a point that will allow a shift in consciousness to happen on a large scale – a scale that is global rather than national.

I learn a lot in watching you and I am not the only one observing developments on planet Earth. We are many and we are using this unique opportunity to collect as much information as possible for future reference and future assistance to other stellar bodies that have reached a similar point on their evolutionary path.

I am thankful to be an observer, a philosopher, a scientific analyst, historian and reporter. I am looking forward to the time when it will be possible to approach you, my dear friends and representatives of this planet, and hold a personal conversation – a conversation that will allow me to hear about your individual journeys and experiences during this time of the shift, your lessons learned and any advice you have for others.

I want you all to know that nothing you are experiencing is in vain or lost, that everything is noticed and noted down for generations to come – here on this planet and on other stellar bodies. You are providing us with invaluable information – information we are respecting and honoring because we are aware of the suffering and sacrifices that go with it.

Be assured that this time of turmoil that accompanies the beginning of the shift, hard as it may be for many of you, prepares the ground and plants the seeds for the new civilization of this planet – a new Earth as it has been promised by many wise men and women.

You, my dear friends reading this, are the forerunners of that shift – you have awoken. I congratulate you and encourage you to continue along your soul's path with commitment, perseverance, courage and joy.

With all my love and gratitude for the path you walk,

Philohstan^{*}
